Pocket Guide to the American Board of Emergency Medicine In-Training Exam Feb 25 2021 "Emergency medicine is a broad discipline. There are many books covering all topics, providing on-line assistance and reference; there are preparatory books for the boards, both written and oral. There are even a few books intended as study tools for the inservice exam. However, almost exclusively, all these books are large and cumbersome. Emergency medicine doctors generally don't utilize big offices, and are often on the move. Unless something can be stuffed into a pocket, it gets tossed into a pile and forgotten. The goal of this book is to provide a concise study guide focused on the inservice exam, and which is small enough to be carried in a pocket"--Provided by publisher.

The Effect of Simulation Training on Knowledge Retention and Skill Self Efficacy in Pediatric Advanced Life Support Courses Mar 17 2020
Through certification courses like the American Heart Association's (AHA) Pediatric Advanced Life Support (PALS), health care providers are trained in assessment and interventions for critically ill and/or injured pediatric patients (American Heart Association, 2010). The purpose of this study was to determine if there were benefits to integration of simulation technology (ST) into PALS curriculum. Participants were randomized to control or experimental classes. Experimental classes received PALS courses with ST while the control classes received PALS courses with static manikins. Multilevel modeling was used to examine the differences between control and experimental classes at course end and 6 months later. In addition, participants completed assessment of Kolb's Learning Style Inventory to determine if preferred learning style moderated knowledge retention and skill self efficacy at 6 month follow up. I hypothesized that healthcare providers who participated in a PALS course with ST would have higher skill self-efficacy (SEI), skill performance, and exam scores at the end of training compared to healthcare providers who participated in a course without ST. The experimental group did not have higher SEI or exam scores at the end of the course however their skill performance was better when compared to the control group. Hypothesis 2 stated health care providers who participated in a PALS course with ST would have higher SEI and exam scores at six months post training compared to healthcare providers in a course without ST. Both control and experimental groups experienced a decrease in SEI scores and exam scores over time however the control group experienced a much faster rate of decrease. Finally, hypothesis three, did learning style moderate the effect of ST in the PALS course on knowledge retention and skill self-efficacy at six months? There was no statistically significant effect of learning style on knowledge and skill self-efficacy at the 6 month follow up.
